

ABSTRACT

“Grace and Space in Interdisciplinary Practice,” is a podcast that was launched last year that provides a space to address topics affecting pediatric health care professionals across all disciplines. This year, the focus of the podcast was to offer a discussion implications, and impact of shifting from mandated reporting to mandated supporting. Individuals with diverse experience in the realm of child welfare system were invited to participate in this conversation on the podcast. The hope is that dissemination of the podcast will increase dialogue and awareness around this movement, particularly among pediatric healthcare providers. Additionally, the podcast will provide the listeners with resources they can utilize and actionable steps they can take to contribute to this movement to community supporting.

Project Plain Language Summary

“Grace and Space in Interdisciplinary Practice,” is a podcast that was created last year to discuss topics that impact healthcare professionals who work with children, teenagers, and young adults. This year, the focus is to offer a discussion around the movement from mandated reporting to community supporting. People who are familiar with this movement from a professional and personal point of view were invited to participate in the podcast as a guest. The overall goal of the podcast is to increase awareness and conversation around this movement and to provide healthcare professionals with specific ways that they can help make this movement a success.